Adam Recke is a special young man who loves to play video games, and sports. He adores Philadelphia teams and loves his family very much. He awakes every day smiling, and his parents look at him adoringly, and with hope. They hope because every day of Adam's life is precious.

Adam has a very rare disease called Niemann-Pick Type C. This terminal disease affects very few individuals; in fact, there are only about 500 cases worldwide. Patients are not able to metabolize cholesterol and other lipids properly within their cells; consequently, excessive amounts of cholesterol accumulate within the liver and spleen and excessive amounts of other lipids accumulate in the brain. Type C causes a secondary reduction of ASM activity, which lead all three types to be considered forms of the same disease.
